Multiple choice question:

Other than personal choice, what is the main reason why graduates don't end up taking their planned career pathways?

a) Job obsolescence
b) The fraught nature of the recruitment process
c) Job market fluctuations and over-supply of graduates
d) Lack of job security

The correct answer is (c).

Graduates may decide not to pursue work in the area that they studied for a number of personal reasons, such as not liking the work, changes in personal circumstances, or travel. However, the most common reason why planned career pathways change is because of lack of availability due to job market fluctuations or an over-supply of graduates.
